				How to Write a Novel: Writing the Draft	Week 1: Introduction / The Aesthetic Journey • Introduction to the course. • Ways to structure and organize your writing time. • Point of view: from whose perspective will the reader experience the story? Each comes with its advantages and disadvantages. • Types of prose and their uses. • Voice: a strong, consistent stylistic quality that permeates your writing. • Beginnings. The first sentence, first paragraph, and first page. Assignment: Explore several different openings for your novel and assess the impact of each one.

					Week 2: The Art of Conflict and Tension • Active and Passive Characters. How to give a character more agency. • Character Complexity and Conflict. Internal, interpersonal, and societal antagonisms help build complex and fully realized characters. • Tension in Scene. • Backstory and Flashbacks. Assignment: Tackle a scene that illustrates a key “turning point” that offers crucial insight into your main character. Week 3: Crafting Believable Dramatic Dialogue • What is the function of dialogue in fiction? • How dialogue differs from everyday speech? • What dialogue should never do? • What are the hallmarks of great dialogue? • How to work with subtext. • Exploring the depths of your character: what is spoken, what is unspoken, and what is unspeakable. • How to format dialogue and work with dialogue tags. Assignment: Write a dialogue in several different forms, exploring the multiple ways it will function in your novel. Week 4: Managing Plot • The evolving outline. What to do when you start to stray from your initial outline. • Troubleshooting Structural Problems. • Troubleshooting plot in five popular fiction genres (literary, speculative, crime, historical, and romance). • Endings. How to navigate through writing an effective ending. Assignment: Write the end of your novel: the last chapter, last scene, last moments. Tools of analysis. Week 5: Research • Why do research? What can research bring to different types of fiction writing? • When to do research. • What should you research? • How do you best incorporate research? • Case studies. Historical Fiction, Speculative Fiction, Crime Fiction, and Socio-Political fiction.
